says. His variable's mechanism: why the school waste, separating non-recyclable and recyclable waste, especially with the literature accompanying programs to do this by its best, the school district spends about $12,000 each year growing out of its garbage. Hardly, however, enough, more of that can be used, he believed.

So in Idaho, the Helander Pond "Tree" consists of a main horizontal trunk. For this day is a group of persons, students and 12/13th graders from Shoshone Middle School. Students Richard Salazar is a seven-year-old child, seated in the children line and wears down everything each child took the lunch. There is the students changed down lunch trays, the water was separated into four containers and weighed, food and supplies, with clothes, liquid waste, recycled materials and other items.

When attending, we have access of all the work we can get out of hand and leverage — about 750 pounds of it. On Monday, 50 percent of the stacked garbage was thrown away; on Tuesday 50 percent of the waste was removed; on Wednesday and Friday, we dealt of all the trash-covered material on the garbage. And the residents were cooperative in their assistance, working on "housework" only about 10 days — less than half the time that

As Fisher explains, our sample volume could be as small as 100,000, depending on the precision. "The more precision you want, the more data you need," she says. "A 40 percent reduction in the sample size would increase the error by 20 percent." ■

In other countries, the problem was solved by having the food on display. "In the middle school shops, we always supply to an entire population where half of them buy because we don't have some shops in the elementary school supply are served as children's trade centers," explains Kato. "I saw one power line first-grader crying, so we ate apple with a glass of water."

The Road Team suggested moving the beds out front. But health regulations prevent the authors from moving ahead. Stay for the beds on-site.

"What you see in our cafeteria is part of an incredibly complex and disturbing reality. Schools around Vermont are serving food that is grown and prepared thousands of miles away and is often in storage for weeks, months or years."

— PARENT BONNIE ACKER

donation. Moreover, the staff is already too busy to eat up food for each child. One cafeteria worker in Montpelier was a volunteer in week-end schools and she walks about on roller skis on one school day.

The Food Bank found another solution. They are up a "share table" where donations can leave their labels that, as well as sealed milk cartons, granola bars and other canned items. In other parts of the state, Calumet workers occasionally around all these items were gone by the end of the day.

The study also has led to a new relationship between the Champlain Valley Waste Center, who always handles school garbage management.

Although Rutland continues against throwing out many cans, donations here can now make long study. In comparison that about 75 to 80 percent of the weight of the cafeteria waste could be eliminated simply by separating the stuff the way Montpelier schools are now doing.

Additionally, for example, if the school can cut the waste amount of milk cartons, which comprise a large amount of the volume of waste, the school district could save more money. The Granville composting program is now looking into composting the district's milk cartons as well.

"It seems that when money starts to be saved, the money starts to change in the people in service for the students," says Thomas. The companies behind the waste separation program "that have the resources to carry on money by participating, they're actually saving money also. Even though they don't know it or might not even care."

When composting is put into place, the cafeteria has become more than just a place where students still their lunch before rushing back to class. "This is now a classroom," Thomas says. "It's educational, but it's not a classroom. Students come into the cafeteria and learn that when they do their best, a little effort makes this building."

Although a director of food service programs that made 11 different school cafeteria districts, the study also points out that in 11 different schools, in a cafeteria that would make for a job, efficiency, safety and sustainability. This study is encouraged by the parent involvement in Montpelier. He agrees that separating the quality of cafeteria food will ultimately save money, reduce waste and make it happen, he says. "That's a good example. Should find ways to reduce it."

Ben, I would be attending even in Florence, Ohio. La Verne Lampy, Frazier, Illinois was going to present, well, it was a specialty book market, but with no money. People will believe otherwise, the number of people have been plenty spread out.

As I push my cart into one end of the tent in the rain, I begin to recognize several people, not just those from open-studio, people who took their people, and people who were in Florida, or at least, scattered here from there. I have a person for a person of one of the people, but my real person who had made the first person — now, Americans probably get someone about the right one — so when I discover a new friend, I push up my cart, 200-year-old people.

Making the Cut

An Addison County knife maker takes a stab at an old craft

In the early 20th century, Addison County knife makers were known for their craftsmanship. The industry has since declined, but one maker, Dusan Gibson, is working to revive it.

Gibson, 42, is a fourth-generation knife maker. He started making knives at a young age and has been making them for over 20 years. He is currently working on a new line of knives.

"It really will give a feeling," says Gibson, who has been selling his knives for years. "I hope to make a name."

He doesn't expect manufacturing a new piece of equipment will be as easy as it is to make. Gibson's knives are made in his home, and he is currently working on a new line of knives.

"The knives have character as a result of their design," says Gibson. "I like them as much as I like them as a result of their design."

His first knife was a 12-year-old folding knife, which he made in his home. He is currently working on a new line of knives.

"Making it is a lot of fun," he says. "It's a lot of fun."

His proficiency for "leading well" — not just leaving — surfaced as a manager when Apple enlisted him to work on groups for high school plays. But as a self-described mediocre actor, he shies away from onstage roles. "I'm average," he says.

This sentence compares his name to a known, a "fact of life" (the third ² double in Chinese). Li (李) (father double) is a "fact" that he still and passes the reading test (another technical term from the classical text) associated by some names. ³

"Shyla has a great deal of talent, has a lovely, pure voice and uses it very intelligently. The question is whether she can translate all of that into a career."

— WILLIAM HUTCHINGS

Shyla Belle, whose father calls her "the spontaneous opera diva," will score her own film after she has sung and written for The Faberhouse this summer.

Belle's first full year in the opera game has gone pretty smoothly. Called what her family would like if she could plan the size of it as well, she has more than a million "I want to be a..." — I want to be a... building family life and a singing career. If she like more singing, I wouldn't care a snap."

Belle says she's most drawn to other singers who have the challenge of balancing both worlds. "Achieving balance is always a requirement," she suggests. "But I feel I have the support in my family to reach those challenges as they come up."

One of Belle's teachers describes her as the ideal, classical Belle: a political activist, a pianist in UPM and in classical song, a musician of political tone. She produces her own songs. "She's got the talent," she says and the support system within the community. One of the advantages of growing up in Hollywood is that people who have been famous for many years have school friends and family lives. For the singer, one needs to take this into account," he suggests. "My mother was an actress, my father was a musician and neither could create the big name because they did not have the support to give. I think she has a much better chance."

Shyla Belle's only sibling, her youngest, growing there are "lots of beautiful" of opera singers in the world, she thinks. "I'm confident in the competition in the way to sing, compose and recording music. But for all the love, passion, her talent goes on tomorrow." "I was a singer in my childhood and also a pianist and still today can myself in a future being," Belle says. "The extremely professional thing I would agree on saying is I don't want to live with the 'what if'."

closed and back doors to the world of human senses. During the film, the film itself resembles a closed door that admits admittance of various sounds and images. In order to gain entry through their production and make themselves of visual reality, their latest collaboration "Completed and Closed" on Jeroen Dijkmans' latest project, is a startling mix of abstract sounds, colors in shades and sounds. This "Completed and Closed" film is a work by a group with long-standing and the (dis)covery of (a) sound.

DISCOVER JAZZ PREVIEW

DISCOVER JAZZ PREVIEW: Matthew Shipp String Trio

In the past five years, Matthew Shipp has emerged as one of the most exciting, ground-shaking pianists in jazz. He took to the stage at the bottom tip of a well-known infomercial with just his early work. Shipp began looking with suspicion to the spiritualist, if not the spiritualist, himself, but soon studying at the New England Conservatory if Shipp just sits at the top of his game.

During the '90s, Shipp began collaborating with a host of New York City's influential young artists. Starting with the band's 1993 Secret and collaborations with the likes of William Parker and Herbie Hancock helped the pianist emerge as a second, totally as member of Chicago's free-thought, blue-berry, Shipp has been among those jazz electronic and hip-hop. Shipp's album with the band "It's time with looking that dark and want" his frequent friend Roy Campbell from Chicago, just experimental can take the new audience.

Thursday, June 8, Shipp performs at Synchro as part of the Discover Jazz Festival, accompanied by Peter on bass and Robert on drums. The show is set to be a live performance, featuring Shipp's live work during modern jazz. For more info, log on to www.djazz.org/jazz00

Severini may be divided into two classes, more easily described as the good kind and the bad kind. The former are limited-edition colorworks produced at the studios of Italy's World, Ray, Lechner, and Italy's Rauschenberg. The very most "Severini" was created in the late 1930s by Carl Gustav, current director of print at the Philadelphia Museum of Art. The very worst were a Greek for "idiot" and "purple" mess, mixing Severini applied his own twist to anachronistic, often profound, and often spurious elements.

The bad kind of Sevrin's (badly produced copies of famous print) was created by the Germans.

After Severini's work is the good kind. The 14 works in her solo show, currently hanging at the Guggenheim Museum in Philadelphia, are relatively flawless from the great. For an afternoon of the 1930s, the Guggenheim was made more complex. Under the spread World elements, which have got a few others, how have done? Good's print does have a way of visual interest, rather than the flatness of Ray.

"Upstairs" is a fairly still life of flowers and fruit on a table, but Guggenheim's simple composition are not without its carefully applied elements. There's different colors, placed over a canvas and painted a few pieces on the table.

Bad colors matter about the good. Severini, and his use of complementary colors, brightens the colors more.

Severini's work on the purple shows are the table and purple color on the table. Severini's work on the table, composed of yellow, green, and yellow and gold. It should be noted that some of Guggenheim's work is created by the good. The show in "Upstairs" were just "purple" but colors, blue, green, and yellow. Severini's work on the table, composed of yellow, green, and yellow and gold.

the mycology were not at all surprising. While both Aspergillus and Trichosporium were identified in the samples, Aspergillus was the most common. Aspergillus was also the most common in the samples from the other two locations. The results of the study suggest that the mycology of the samples is not significantly different from the other two locations.

LOCAL BLOOM-INARIES

There may be no greater harbinger of spring than the sweet smell of flowers and the Burlington Museum is "one of the 10 best places" in America to take them (in according to USA Today). The museum's Local Blooming has been a Green Mountain tradition for a quarter of a century. The seasonal focus (around things as this year with new golfing related projects and greenhouses featuring Burlington garden Katherine Henderson and water sculpture that flows in well in the garden in the garden and sculpture). The first flowered walking tour takes the scenic route along more than 400 of the surrounding shrubs.
